A Wild Intern Appeared!

Think back to about 6 months ago when you were pulling all-nighters to prepare for internship applications and interviews. You just got back from your final round trip visiting your favorite company in the Bay Area when you receive a phone call. On the other end is the recruiter from that very company. The news is positive and you learn that you will be spending your next summer in Silicon Valley. SCORE! You bolted to your computer and instantly started researching online. So much to figure out! What is the work like? Where will I live? Do I need a raincoat in San Francisco? Do I need to buy a Prius? Can I have a dog? Where all the single ladies, or men, at? Should I get dreadlocks? The list goes on and on.

Now back to today. You are in the process of finishing your internship and have spent the last few months here in the Bay Area. You are now an expert and have to ability to answer all those questions! Wouldn't it be great if you knew all of this 6 months ago? Well now it's time for you to give back to the community… This challenge requires you to blog about your experience at your internship or life in Silicon Valley. Tell the upcoming interns something you wish you would have known before you started working!

Don't worry if you don't have a blog, there is no better time to start one. Blogging is one of the best investments you can make in your career, as it helps to establish your online persona. Your blog is a place to share your thoughts, code, or just random cat pictures… Who knows, you may even become internet famous and a Silicon Valley Superstar.

To get credit for this challenge, you will need to submit your blog post link! If you are not a programmer don't fret! There are a million ways to do this and it's well documented across the web. If you are looking at where to start check out this and this. Looking forward to hearing what you have to say!

~Andrew